

My Teaching Philosophy

My teaching philosophy is to have students strive to their greatest ability, be positive, have fun and learn in more ways than one, and grow into their own person in your classroom.

As a teacher I want to be able to show the students that there is more than one way to solve a problem. I want to impact their lives. I know that I may fail or not be able to meet everyone's expectations, but in the end I will try my hardest and devote all my time to my kids. Interaction with the kids is the strongest ability for a teacher and it is needed in the classroom. If both teachers and students have faith then they can do and be anything

Most teachers overwhelm students with projects, hard work and tests all the time and all at once, but as a teacher I would try to spread it out and take time to teach things a little better, easier to understand, and in different ways. The relationship between a student and a teacher should be positive, professional, respectful, caring, and willing. With these characteristics, and the participation from the students, I hope to expand and impact their lives inside and outside of school.
